Southeastern Line will Run Train to People of Seymour and Jackson Bedford, Leaving After Evening Address.

TRACTION TO RUN SECTIONS CAKES, PIES, SALADS, JELLY

B. & O. Westbound Train Leaving Effort to be Made to Give Local Here at 11:28 will Make All Local Stops.

The railroad and traction companies entering this city will lend their hearty co-operation in handling the crowds that will come to Seymour Saturday for the Patriotic Celebration and the Food Conservation meeting. At a meeting of the general committee of the organization Monday night a guarantee to the Southeastern Line was given for a special train to be run to Bedford, leaving here after the address by William Jennings Bryan in the evening. It is expected that a great crowd will be here from Bedford and other points on the Southeastern Line. The regular morning service to this city on that road will be augmented.

Both traction companies entering the city have agreed to run their cars in sections if necessary to handle the crowds to the demonstration. The Second Indiana Infantry Regimental Band and the members of Company K will leave Jeffersonville on special cars about 7 o'clock and will reach this city about 9 o'clock. These cars will probably be run as sections on the same schedule of the regular 9:15 limited.

J. S. Mills, chairman of the transportation committee, reported that the Baltimore & Ohio Company would run a special train between Seymour and Mitchell, returning after the evening meeting. Westbound train No. 3 will also make local stops west of Mitchell, Saturday. Special transportation service has been arranged east of here.

The Pennsylvania Company has authorized the announcement that it will hold the accommodation train to the south due here about 9 o'clock until after the evening meeting. The Baltimore & Ohio will also arrange for its late westbound train to make local stops. It is believed that with (Continued on page 2, column 1.)

CHICKEN DINNER FOR BOYS OF CO. K

People of Seymour and Jackson County Asked to Contribute Articles for Menu.

Sammys a Big Dinner on Their Visit Here Saturday.

The Sammies of Company K, Second Indiana Infantry, are to have a big chicken dinner on Saturday when they come here to attend the Patriotic Day celebration. It will be a feature of the farewell reception to be given the boys before they leave for their training camp in the South. Every man and woman in Jackson county is enthusiastically in favor of giving the boys a real "spread" so that they will long remember their visit to "their old home town." Any visiting soldiers will also be served. Members of the Regimental Band will also be guests.

In preparing and serving this meal the women of Seymour are to be given a real opportunity for service. The menu must be contributed by local people. What is undertaken is to give the boys a dinner "just like mother would have" for them and in order that this can be accomplished mothers and sisters must aid. It is not believed that any trouble will be experienced in arranging the dinner. Scores of women in Seymour and Jackson county will only be too glad to contribute something for this meal. Their names will be placed on the honor roll.

FALSE FIRE ALARM SOUNDED THIS MORNING

Fire Chief Everhart Gives Members Tryout With the New Motor Fire Truck.

A false fire alarm was sounded about 9 o'clock this morning in order to give the city firemen a tryout with the new motor truck. The alarm was turned in by Chief Everhart, who had left the hose house to attend to some business matters. While at Adolph Steinwedel's store he decided to give the firemen a tryout in order to see how long it would take them to get the new machine in operation and reach the scene of a fire. The alarm was sounded which called them to the Woolen Mill district and upon their arrival at that destination they were flagged and told to return to the hose house. Fireman Mead Downs drove the fire truck. He was just one minute in getting the truck out of the building and three minutes in reaching the scene of the supposed to be fire.

Fire Chief Everhart feels that the men made a good showing with the truck, that being the first alarm sounded since it has been in operation. However, it is believed that after the firemen become more accustomed to it, they will be able to make more speedy time.

Building Owned by Walter McMahan, Salt Creek Township is Totally Destroyed.

During the electrical storm which swept over this county Monday afternoon, a barn owned by Walter McMahan, near Buffalo, Salt Creek township, was hit by lightning and was totally destroyed. There was no live stock in the building but many farming implements and some feed were burned. Mr. McMahan carried $350 insurance on the building and contents.

The home of Samuel McKinney, near Freetown, was totally destroyed by fire Sunday afternoon. Mrs. McKinney was away from the house at the time and her husband was watering the stock on the farm. When he returned he found the house in flames. Only a few chairs were saved. Mr. McKinney carried $500 insurance on the house and contents.

TAG DAY WILL BE HELD TO RAISE COMPANY FUND

This Plan Decided Upon by Military Affairs Committee of the Commercial Club.

The mess fund for Company K will be raised by a tag day next Saturday, this plan having been decided upon Monday night at a meeting of the military affairs of the Commercial Club. Claude Carter is chairman of this committee and has been active in arranging plans to raise the funds.

With the announcement that the tag day will be held comes the opportunity for the young ladies of the city to enlist for active service. The Boy Scouts have agreed to assist in "tagging" persons who contribute for this fund, but more solicitors will be needed. In this work volunteers are wanted. It is pointed out that there will be no exemptions granted as the young ladies of the city will be expected to help Company K. It is believed that a large number of girls will offer their services for part of Saturday, at least, and that through the tag day plan several hundred dollars can be raised.

Any young lady who will volunteer to help in this work may give her name to Mr. Carter at the Hub.

DRAFTED MEN CAN TAKE ONLY NECESSARY CLOTHING

Local Boards Must Inspect Each Man's Kit Just Before He Enters.

By United Press.

Washington, August 21.—Loving mothers, sweethearts and kind friends mustn't load drafted men down with a lot of clothes and comforts when they start to camp, September 1. Provost Marshal General Crowder ruled today. The 206,100 boys enlisting for cantonments will be allowed to take very little. Trunks are absolutely taboo. Suitcases and handbags will be frowned upon.

The war department prefers that each man bring only necessary toilet articles and one change of underclothing done up in a neat small bundle. Members of each man's local board will inspect his kit before he entrants, rejecting everything that has no place therein and returning the surplus articles to his relatives.

According to the regulations all man can take is a tooth brush, a piece of soap, a collapsible drinking cup, a towel, a few handkerchiefs, an extra shirt and collar, a suit of underwear and a pair of socks.

Join the Colors.

Earl M. Amick and Ponce M. Mills, of this city, and Harry J. Cunningham, of Crothersville, went to Indianapolis this morning to enlist in the regular army. Amick will enter the service as a baker and Mills and Cunningham will enter the infantry branch of the service.

I have a lot of rye on hand that I want to grind and get rid of between now and August 25, that I will sell at a very low price. I also grind rye for farmers at anytime for feed.

I have plenty of Schumacher Hog feed on hand at a very low price and plenty of Alfalfa Molasses horse feed. G. H. Anderson.

PEACE WILL COME WITHIN ONE YEAR

This is the Opinion of High Government Officials in View of Latest Events.

By United Press.

London, August 21.—The greatest battle of the world war was being fought today. From the sea coast to the Swiss border—over 435 miles—the allied forces were fighting a practically continuous offensive.

The great battle started with the Anglo offensive in Flanders, extended to the British offensive at Lens—thence to the French attack around St. Quentin, then to the French offensive at the Ladies' highway, Verdun and concluded with heavy artillery fighting in Lorraine and Alsace down to Switzerland.

England, France, Belgium and Italy joined today in the powerful concerted offensive against Germany. Russia alone of the great allied powers was not participating in the concerted assault.

Even Roumania through her reorganized army was making a stout opposition to a great Teutonic attempt at encroachments on the fragment of Roumanian left in the allies' hands. The Macedonian and Russian fronts were the only ones today in Europe from which there were no reports of an Allied offensive.

The third and most powerful of all German counter attacks to regain ground captured by the British southeast of Epehy was thrown back by British fire early today, Field Marshal Haig reported.

The assault was made after violent artillery preparation and behind a vast sheet of flame thrown by German projectors. The fighting was of the most violent character.

"We hold all positions," was Field Marshal Haig's comment in detailing repulse of the enemy counter attacks.

Italy's prisoners in the greatest drive her troops have made in the world war reached a total of 10,000 today. Semi-official estimates place the Austrian losses in dead and wounded as this same number. On the three fronts today—the Julian, Carso and Isonzo—General Cadorna's drive was continuing in fierce combat of men and of guns that resounded over nearly a hundred miles of front.

TO HANDLE CROWD

these arrangements the crowds will have splendid accommodations for reaching the city and for returning home the same evening.

Hundreds of people will drive to the city in automobiles. The State Food Commission realized the excellent condition of the roads into this city when it designated Seymour as the point for holding this meeting.

The committee reported that all arrangements were coming around satisfactorily and that early reports indicated the greatest crowd that has ever assembled in Seymour for a one day celebration. The advertising committee has ready for distribution several thousand handbills and "one sheets." It is desired that everyone in the city take a personal interest in advertising this demonstration and hundreds of these bills have already been distributed by local motorists who have driven into surrounding sections of the country. It is urged that motorists who are making trips out of Seymour aid in this work and distribute as many of the bills as possible. Anyone contemplating a trip this week can receive a supply of the posters and bills from Claude Carter at the Hub Clothing Store. This co-operation will be appreciated and will go a long ways towards advertising this big celebration.

The committee has arranged for special police during the day. Tanks of ice water will be located at various parts of the city. The addresses will be given at the Shields Park.

PHYSICIANS MUST REPORT
ALL TUBERCULOSIS CASES

Failure to Comply with the State
Law Requirements Means
Prosecution for Doctors.

Dr. M. F. Gerrish, city health officer, has received a communication from the state board of health stating that there has been some misunderstanding on the part of the health officers and physicians over the state as to the requirements of the law on reporting tuberculosis cases. The communication states that physicians must report cases of tuberculosis as soon as they are discovered. The state furnishes special blanks for this purpose which are distributed by the different health officers. The cards after being properly filled out must be turned over to the local health officer and he will forward them immediately to the state board of health.

The law is rigid in regard to this matter, the letter from the state board states, and not to report a case of tuberculosis is a violation of the law and will subject the offending physicians to penalties. Diligence in making diagnoses is emphasized.

The law pertaining to the prompt reporting of all tuberculosis cases was enacted as the first step in adopting intelligent and effective preventive measures of spreading the disease, the letter to the local health officer stated.

Conservation Day.

August the 25th, 1917, has been designated as Conservation day for Southern Indiana.

On this day it will be your good fortune to hear some of the most noted orators of this great and good country of ours, expound to you the necessity of conservation and the elimination of waste.

This does not only apply to the food problem, but also to the foot problem.

This article treats on just such a subject and that is getting the best footwear for the least money.

Conserve your supply of money, not by buying cheap shoddy footwear thereby sacrificing wearing qualities, and making only an apparent saving of a dollar at the time which however in the end means a waste of money, but by buying good reliable footwear, with a slightly greater cost at the time, which however in the end will mean two to three times the amount of service, and the elimination of the waste of money.

The policy of this store is:—The best footwear for the least money.

New Brunswick.—Howard Frances, eighteen, of 471 Hancock street, Brooklyn, was drowned in the South river near here in a vain attempt to save the life of his seventeen-year-old chum, Patrick O'Sullivan of Philadelphia.

The boys had been bathing in the river and O'Sullivan, who could not swim, was dangling from a rope swung from a barge, pulling himself up, and then letting himself go. He lost his hold on the rope and sank.

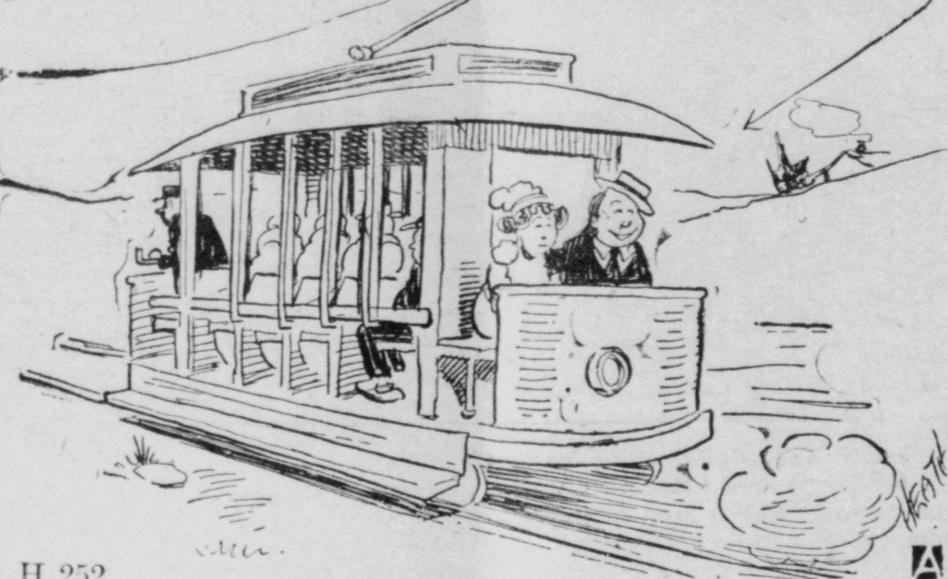

Frances, who was on the deck of the barge, plunged in to help his chum. O'Sullivan grasped him around the neck and both went down. Frances' body was recovered after a half hour search, but O'Sullivan's is still missing.

BACKACHE IS DISCOURAGING

But Not So Bad If You Know How to Reach the Cause.

Nothing more discouraging than a constant backache. Lame when you awaken, pains pierce you when you bend or lift. It's hard to work or to rest. Backache often indicates bad kidneys. Seymour people recommend Doan's Kidney Pills. Read this case: Herman Meier, 312 W. Brown St., Seymour, says: "I had backaches and pains across my loins. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage, sometimes being scanty and painful. Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at Meyer's Drug Store, relieved the backaches and regulated the action of my kidneys."

JENNINGS COUNTY MAN IS CHARGED WITH SERIOUS CRIME

Accused by His Own Daughter of Compelling Her to Have Improper Relations with Him.

Jacob Baumgartner, a farmer residing two miles northeast of Hayden in Jennings county, is being held in the Jennings county jail at Vernon with an incest charge hanging over him. The charge was filed following the accusation that he was having improper relations with his own daughter. Baumgartner is about sixty years old.

The case against the aged man was filed several days ago after his daughter had given the information to different people. Baumgartner's crime was first known by the women of the neighborhood, the girl having told some friends. Before it was generally known among the men, charges had been filed and he was placed under arrest.

The residents of the section in which Baumgartner resides are much enraged over the affair and for a time it was feared that a mob would organize and do the man bodily harm. However, he is being carefully guarded to prevent any harm befalling him and the residents are becoming more quieted over the affair. Baumgartner's trial will come up at the next term of the Jennings county court.

TWO CRAFTS ARE DOWNED BY ADJUTANT THIEFFRY IN THE SAME ENGAGEMENT.

By Henry Wood, United Press Staff Correspondent.

Paris, August 21.—Adjutant Edmond Thieffry, a Belgian aviator, who has just distinguished himself by bringing down two German machines in the same combat, has another distinction of which today he is still the sole possessor in the entire aviation world. In the course of desperate aerial fights Thieffry has himself been brought down no less than five times by his adversary, and has figured in the German official account of these combats as having been killed. No other aviator has ever survived an equal number of defeats.

Thieffry's career is one of the aviation romances of the war. With the German invasion of Belgium, Thieffry was first mobilized as a motorcycle messenger on the staff of General Leman. He was made prisoner, succeeding later in escaping into Holland, where he was interned, but from where he again succeeded in eluding his guards and making his way into the Belgian lines.

In July, 1915, he entered the aviation service and for a year and a half went through all the more important raids of the Belgian bombarding squadrons. By December, 1916, he won promotion into a fighting squadron and during the first six months of 1917 established for himself a record almost without equal. On January 24th he flew over Brussels arousing the most intense enthusiasm on the part of the Belgian population still remaining there. He descended to within seventy-five feet of the city's streets and dropped leaflets assuring his compatriots of their ultimate deliverance.

On March 25, he brought down his first enemy machine. The second followed just eight days later for which he received a citation and the Croix de Guerre. On July 3, came his double exploit. He was returning from a reconnaissance over the German lines, when he suddenly found himself confronted with fourteen German machines. Flying straight into the center of the German squadron Thieffry picked his man and downed him. Picking a second, he downed him in less than two minutes. With two machines taken out of the center of the German squadron, a "hole" was created big enough for Thieffry to fly through their barrage, the remaining twelve Germans refusing even to chase him.

The fact that Thieffry has been downed five times by enemy machines demonstrates his qualities as an aviator rather than his lack of them. Each time that he has been "downed" he has been in the closest, deadliest combat with his adversary in which the latter merely happened to get the advantage, the "drop" as it were, that must come to every aviator once in a while.

SOLDIERS OF YESTERDAY ASSEMBLY IN BOSTON

Seven Thousand Veterans in Big Parade at Second National G. O. P. Reunion.

By United Press.

Boston, August 21.—The "soldiers of yesterday"—veterans of the G. A. R. more than 7,000 strong, marched in a huge parade here today,—the second of the national reunion.

With the veterans marched other allied organizations, among which was the Navy Medal Honor League, which is holding its annual convention in conjunction with the G. A. R. encampment.

Members of the Ladies' Auxiliary, the Sons of Veterans, Daughters of Veterans and the Women's Relief Corps of the G. A. R., also took part in the parade.

In front of the State House the veterans were relieved by Governor J. H. Carnes, pastor.

Mr. and Mrs. Howard Hess and daughter, Mary Louise spent Sunday at Columbus where they were entertained as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Clarence A. Thompson.

WOMEN ARE PATRIOTIC BUT ARE ONLY ROOKIES

BARNARD SAYS MANY WANT TO "DO THEIR BIT" BUT ARE LACKING IN EFFICIENCY.

Indianapolis, August 21.—Although she may be fired with patriotism and a desire to serve her country in the war crisis, the average American housewife is merely a "rookie" in the nation's service unless she gives serious study to food-saving suggestions put out by the government, Harry E. Barnard, Indiana food and drug commissioner, declared today. In an article prepared for the United Press, Barnard paid tribute to the loyalty of American women and their willingness to sacrifice to aid their nation win the war. But he emphasized the need for them to make scientific study to the food problem.

"Moll Pitcher swabbing out the smoking muzzle of the cannon her wounded husband could no longer serve, remains an inspiring picture of heroic service," Barnard said. "She was 'doing her bit' in the vital moments of battle and doing it well.

"And today in quite the same spirit, though in a very different way, women are filled with desire to serve. The opportunity to handle a gun in the front rank can come to but few men and no women. But the equally necessary work of producing and saving food—even three thousand miles from the battle line—must go on, and this is the women's opportunity. The rallying call for careful saving sent out by the national federation of Women's Clubs reached every member of this great organization. Food Administrator Hoover's appeal to women to save food at home that our allies may not starve, went to women willing to do their part. The splendid advices broadcasted by the department of agriculture, with its suggestions for cutting down the waste of bread and fat and the use of other cereals for the all essential wheat, has been especially valuable in promoting thrifit and changing fixed habits of eating.

"Women need no urging in this time of universal service. They do need helpful direction. The great mass of housewives who have no club affiliations, who have little time to read and less time to apply the really excellent suggestions for changing their methods of cookery detailed in the technical magazines for the home, or furnished by experts at Washington in the form of government bulletins, are especially in need of specific instruction. They are ready to enlist but they are 'rookies' and they cannot hope to become efficient soldiers until they have been taught how. And here is where the daily paper becomes the drill sergeant and gives instructions that make it possible for every woman to bake corn bread instead of wheat, to prepare cheap meats instead of expensive cuts; to use new kinds of vegetables and new fats and oils, and with all those changes in foods and cookery to keep her family well nourished.

"Any attempt at food economy that is not so wisely planned that the children continue to grow strong and healthy and the efficiency of the workers of the family is kept at a maximum, is wasted effort and an injury instead of a help.

"But this result is little to be feared and the Army of Women mobilized for special and important services in every home stands ready for service.

People of this and Jennings county inform us that the business men's parade and sham battle at the Old Soldier's Reunion at Mitchell Thursday was a fizzle, in the fullest sense as nothing of the kind was even attempted. The attendance was large but spiritless.

The people of Seymour and Jackson county are anxious to show the members of Company K how genuinely they appreciate their loyal and patriotic service. These boys are part of this community. Many of them have spent their entire lives in this city and community. Their friends and their interests are here. They look to this city and county for encouragement. What will be done for the local Sammies on next Saturday will long be remembered by them. There is no question but that they will deeply appreciate the big dinner that is being prepared for them. The mothers and sisters in Jackson county will want to contribute something to this meal. They do not know how long it will be until their own sons and brothers are called to service, if they have not already been called. What the people of this community will do for Company K every mother and sister would appreciate if her son or brother were encamped in some distant state and the same courtesy were shown. Upon the housewives in Jackson county falls the responsibility of making the dinner for Company K next Saturday a success.

Germany ought to begin to take notice now. Among the American Indians who have enlisted in the United States army are a number of the Sioux tribe. Two of them have unusual names which will be of interest to the kaiser and his clique. Their names are "Did-Not-Butch," and "Horse-Thief-Wounded-with-Many-Arrows-and-Taken-Alive-and-Came-Home-Alive."

People Sayso

The Seymour Daily Republican: Kindly permit me to correct a statement in your paper of Saturday, August 18th.

The Commercial Club of Seymour furnished the money for the seed that was bought for the gardens this last spring. The Charity organization had nothing at all to do with it.

Aunt Sallie Blakey's garden was one of the best in the southwestern part of the city and I trust the police will make a special effort to find the thief. There are many worthy poor in Seymour and it has been surprising to see how well they have cared for their gardens this summer and many of them will have vegetables all winter. A few refused to put in any garden at all. No doubt these few expect to live by stealing from those that have tried to do their part in the patriotic movement. I feel by careful watching the thieves may easily be caught and I trust to Mayor Ross to sentence them heavily enough.

$5,000 BOND REQUIRED OF
HOUSE MOVING CONTRACTOR

City Demands Protection from Possible Damage to Streets—School Building Removed.

W. T. Rhude, a house moving contractor, who has a contract with Jackson township to move the Cobb school building from west of the city to Glenlawn, was held up from running his traction engine and the house which is being moved on heavy rollers, on West Second street, until a new bond for $5,000 was fixed and filed with the city clerk. The new bond prevents the city from being held directly responsible for any damage suit that might result and guarantees to repair all damage to the paved streets, should any occur.

Mr. Rhude was busy this afternoon having the new bond filled out and expects to continue with the house moving as soon as possible. He has laid out a route to get the house to the new location that passes over Second street to Walnut, south on Walnut to Bruce, east on Bruce to O'Brien and thence to Glenlawn.

It is pointed out that the cutting of electric light and telephone wires will be necessary at several points in order to get the house through the streets, and unless the telephone company and the Public Service Company are assured that all damage done to their property will be repaired with no expense to them, it is probable that they will register a complaint. Rhude, however, agrees to pay for all damage, it is said, but the two companies have not as yet given their consent to have their wires molested. Rhude, on the other hand, feels that he is entitled to pass over the streets.

The Cobb school building has been abandoned several years past and it was decided by the township authorities to have it moved to Glenlawn to accommodate school patrons there. Heretofore the Glenlawn school children have been transferred to the schools in this city for which the township has been compelled to pay a tuition, and it is believed by the officials that they will be able to save the taxpayers money in making this move.

CHAPTER I.

LITTLE Johnny Sees the Soldiers. LITTLE Johnny Pershing peered around the end of the work train. "Dad," he called, his shrill child's voice sounding above the "thud, thud, thud!" of the picks wielded by the construction gang, "oh, dad, kin I stay from school today? Company H is goin' to have a drill, and I want to see them."

John Pershing, construction foreman, wiped the perspiration from his brow and climbed down from the embankment where the new side track was being laid. He approached the boy, laid his hand on his shoulder and asked, "What does mother say?"

"She told me to run over and ask you."

"Well, if mother don't say no, go ahead."

With a whoop of delight and evidently anticipating his mother's consent, little Johnny ran for home as fast as his little bare brown feet would carry him. His mother stood in the doorway of the neat little white cottage. She smiled, knowing that father had followed the usual plan of "leaving it to mother."

"Father says I kin stay if you don't care, mother. Please let me see the soldiers drill!"

"Well, I guess one afternoon from school won't make much difference, and you do love to watch the soldiers, don't you, Johnny?"

"I sure do, mother."

"Well, get your face and hands washed and come in to lunch."

After lunch Johnny lied to the village square of the little town of Laclede, Mo., and took up his point of vantage on the band stand, where he could see all operations.

The drill over, Captain Johnson, attracted by the keen interest with which the barefooted little urchin had followed every movement, said, "Well, sonny, what do you think of my soldiers?"

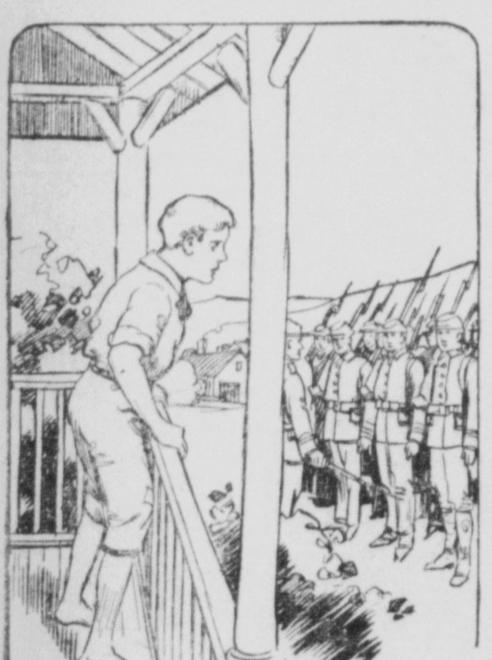

"They're pretty good drillers, captain, but they don't step out smart enough."

"By Jove! Right you are, boy! That's just what I was tellin' them. Are you going to be a soldier when you grow up?"

"That's what I want to be, but dad says he has other plans."

"Maybe he'll change his mind when you get big, sonny. Plans don't allow work out as expected."

But even little Johnny Pershing's plans, way back there in Missouri in the sixties, were not formed with postiveness, as is the case with the plans of so many youngsters. True, he wanted to be a soldier. What live lad in the years just after the civil war did not have his thoughts fired by the stories of fighting in the great struggle? In his dreams he saw himself leading desperate charges against the enemy? But he also had dreams of being a lawyer and standing, like Daniel Webster or Henry Clay, with one hand thrust into his coat, moving judges and juries with his eloquence. He and his mother and father just knew, of course, that Johnny would make a fine lawyer, because he always stood well in his studies in the town school.

"Mother," said the elder Pershing one day, "I feel I'm getting a bit too old to work on the road much longer. Old Brainard passed me on the street today and stopped to chat with me. He wants me to buy out his general store and thinks I could make it pay. What do you say?"

After much planning between Mr. Pershing and his wife and weighing of possibilities the step was decided upon, and Johnny Pershing's father became a merchant. Johnny's part in the matter was that of active partner—very active, indeed, for to him fell the work of assisting in the store after school and running on such errands as were not beyond his strength.

"Johnny's a good boy and helpful to Military academy at West Point which had turned out so many famous soldiers. It was a narrow squeak for John, since he won the appointment by only one point. A difference almost too small to be measured would have sent another man to "the Point," and John would in all likelihood have become a city lawyer instead of a general.

CHAPTER III.

An Officer in the Army.

WHETHER a man remains in the army long enough to win his general's stars or whether he leaves the service before he even finishes the course at the Military academy, he never forgets the day that sees him enrolled at "the Point." It is one of "the days of" in his life. It is all so new and strange and there are so many rules to be observed and customs to be learned and things to be seen that it is like beginning a new life. Many a country lad enters the academy raw, green and untrained, and if he has the pluck and stamina, mental and physical, to finish the course he emerges a finished product—an officer and a gentleman—fit to command men.

So it was with John Pershing. But he did more than finish the course; he went through it with honor. He was graduated as senior cadet captain, which means that in military affairs he ranked above all his classmates. Others topped him in some of the studies which make up the curriculum at the United States Military academy, but it was his voice that rang out the commands for his classmates on the widespread and beautiful parade ground on the proud day when the cadets were reviewed by the secretary of war. This was in June, 1886, and John became Lieutenant Pershing, United States army. He was then twenty-six years old.

He had been home to visit the "folks" during his furlough after he had been at the academy two years. His friends turned out to greet him, of course, and the rest of the town flocked to see him arrive. It isn't every day that a man from West Point arrives at a little place in Missouri, and every one wanted to see as soon as possible what two years of Uncle Sam's training had done for Johnny Pershing. They were not disappointed.

He had left Laclede a tall, wiry, young fellow, without any especial distinction; he returned a well set up, strong chap, showing in his bearing the results of the rigid training of the gymnasium and fields. He had already assumed the bearing of a military man. He had become a wonderful equestrian, riding anything that the academy held in the line of horseflesh. He was always first to get away when the bugles rang out the notes of the "Charge!"

Of course John's first day home was given to his folks. No one else could take the first happy hours of the young man on furlough. But the second day found him wandering in the fields and woods with his boyhood chum, Charley Surgeon.

"Won't, neither!" said Billy. And in a moment, as the teacher reached for his collar (this was long before the days of "moral suasion"), there was a lively mixup in the country school; but, of course, the teacher won, and the thoroughly thrashed and cowed Billy stayed in.

Next day the school had a visitor. He was Billy's father, and every hair in his red side whiskers bristled with anger as he drove up to the school. From his mouth came a stream of curses on Johnny Pershing. He'd show him whether he could lick his boy or not. In his hand was a big army revolver. It looked pretty serious for Johnny Pershing. The young fellow did not scare. In a quiet, even tone he said to the angry farmer:

"Get off your horse, put up your gun, take off your coat and fight like a man!"

With all his bluster, the man was not a coward. He accepted John's invitation, and there was the finest scrap ever seen in that part of Missouri. John was then only a lad of seventeen or eighteen, but he whipped the grown man to a frazzle.

"John," said Mr. Pershing to his son one day not long after this fight, "Mr. Burroughs is going to appoint a young man from this congressional district to West Point. You've always had a sort of idea that you wanted to be a soldier. Why don't you try for the appointment?"

"I'll do it, father," said John. "I am sure I can pass the examinations if Mr. Burroughs will give me permission to try. I'll go and see him today."

So "Towhead" Johnny Pershing went to call on Congressman Burroughs and obtained his permission to enter the council of Navaho braves. It was a holiday, and the redskins were amusing themselves with games and athletic contests.

One of the braves spied the tall, athletic figure of Lieutenant Pershing.

He walked up to the soldier.

"Huh!" he said, following it with a long string of Indian gutturals.

"He says he wants to wrestle with the big white man," said the interpreter.

"Tell him," said Pershing, "nothing doing. He's too dirty."

"All right," was the Indian's retort.

"If I'm too dirty to wrestle with I'll run him a foot race. All he'll have to do is keep ahead of me."

"Race him, Jack," said Lieutenant Grayson. "It's up to you to uphold the honor of the white race."

"Can't be done. You know my ankle is still weak from that sprain."

"They won't believe it. You can beat the big buck anyway."

So the race was run and was nearly lost by Pershing. About ten feet from the finish line his ankle gave way and he rolled over in a heap. But his presence of mind remained upright, and with a mighty effort he gathered himself up into a ball, turned a somersault and landed across the line a winner.

CHAPTER IV.

Fighting and Studying.

SO the years go for Pershing in the west. There is some fighting, much marching and drilling, with official commendation for duty well performed. But promotion lags. The call of Blackstone and Kent still tries to lure him from the profession of arms, but it is not until 1893, when he has just completed a year's term as military instructor at the University of Nebraska, that he wins his degree of bachelor of laws. He has put in all his spare time in the study of the law. He will make a good lawyer, for his keen mind is used to reasoning out closely the problems that confront him. But he has spent eleven years in the army, including the four years as the Military academy, and it is hard to break away from long associations. He will remain in the service, for awhile at least, he thinks. His men think well of him, especially the colored troopers of the Tenth cavalry, in command of whom he has acquired the sobriquet of "Black Jack." He has also served as an instructor at the military academy.

In the meantime his belief that the United States will never become involved in another war is in a fair way to be disproved. For a century or more the black cloud of revolt has hung over Cuba and the Philippines, and the severity of the Spanish government in the "Pearl of the Antilles" has evoked protests from the United States. Then come the destruction of the Maine, the fevered debates in congress, the declaration of war, and every regular army officer is burning to get into the scrap in Cuba. Of course "Black Jack" Pershing was one.

It is on the day of El Caney, one of the hottest fights of the short war, that the colonel of the Tenth cavalry turns to his orderly. "Who commands those troopers there on the right?" he asks.

"That's Pershing, sir."

"By Jove, I thought so! He's the man! See him go up that hill! I've been through the civil war and I've seen men under fire many a time, but, on my word, he's the bravest and coolest man under fire I ever saw in my life! Washington shall hear of this, sir!"

And Washington did hear of it, to such good effect that Lieutenant Pershing, now major of volunteers, went to the Philippines when that bunch of unruly islands needed cleaning up. In the meantime he had shown his fine administrative abilities as organizer and first chief of the bureau on insular affairs. It was hard work, almost like setting up a new department of the government, and many a time Pershing could be seen nights in Washington stretching his walks for miles and miles toward the outskirts of the city while he wrestled with the problems that confronted him. But he "made good," as he had done in everything he undertook since his boyhood days.

"I have heard of these new white men who have come to our lands to take the place of the Spaniards," said Datto Bangbang of the Moros to his most intimate friend. "They are better fighters than the Spaniards, it is said. But they cannot prevail against us. Are not our krisses and barongs sharp enough to cut them up? Have we not the great prophet with us, who promises us everlasting bliss hereafter if we die killing the dogs of unbelievers? Let them come!"

"I have heard of these Moros," said "Black Jack" Pershing. "They're tough customers. But they've got to obey the laws and stop their fighting now that our Uncle Sam is their new overlord. I think we can clean them up, eh, Bill?" And Lieutenant Brewster, his friend, nodded and said, "You bet!"

The days were very full now for Pershing and Brewster and their men and all the other Americans who were trying to instill lawabiding ways into the fierce Moros. It was a hard task. Some said that it was impossible. They had to fight not only against the savage Moros, but against a treacherous climate, ill suited to the white man, even though he is able to take all possible care of himself. But when the white man has to do his fighting now in swamp and jungle, now in the sides of steep mountains, now in the hot tropical sunshine and now in the cool of the evening and the deep tropical midnight against a brave, wily, fanatical enemy it is not to be wondered at that the fight dragged on for years. Even men like Pershing, backed by soldiers brave as any the world ever produced, could not be expected to complete the job in a short time.

The smoking room of the Army and Navy club in Washington was well filled when the news came that "Pershing had done it again." "What do you think of 'Black Jack' Pershing?" asked one member of another. "Jefferson's been up at the secretary's today, and the old man told him that Pershing's not only cleaned up the Moros, but has got the blooming heathen to elect him one of their chiefs. What d'ye call those chiefs? Say, Brown, you've been up against the Moros. What do they call those chiefs of theirs? Oh, yes; dattos. Much obliged. We've got a datto among us now, boys. Pershing's a datto. Datto Pershing sounds well, doesn't it?"

And at that minute in the far away Philippines Captain Pershing—he had his two bars on his shoulders now—was walking through a Moro village with brown skinned Moro maidens strewing flowers in his pathway. Was he thinking of the flowers and the homage that was being paid to him? Not a bit of it. He was rehearsing in his mind the passage from the Koran which he was going to spring on Datto Bangbang to heighten still further that dusky chieftain's respect for him!

Wily Pershing! He has had the wit to see that these people can be pacified as well by getting inside their minds as by shooting civilization into them. He has done his share of shooting, with extraordinary courage that is to bear extraordinary fruit in Washington. Twice he went after the Moros—in 1901-3 and in 1911-13.

CHAPTER V.

Making a Record Jump—Romance and Tragedy.

THE news of Pershing's promotion to brigadier general thrilled Washington and sent a wave of astonishment through the nation. From captain to brigadier general! Over the heads of 802 senior officers jumps the man who was once undecided whether he should become a lawyer or a soldier. Unprecedented jump and one not to be repeated, in all likelihood, in the history of the American army. But the former soldier in the White House has followed with admiration and perhaps just a bit of envy the wonderful work of the soldier in the Philippines.

"I've just got to promote that man. Taft says the law won't let me make him a major or a colonel. What shall I do with him?" By Godfrey, I've got it, I've got it! Hello, hello, give me Secretary Taft at once. Mr. Taft, does the law permit the president of the United States to make a general officer of any officer in the United States army? It is your opinion that it does. Good! Have your man make out a commission for Brigadier General John J. Pershing as soon as you can, send it over to me, and I'll sign it at once. Goodby."

"Miss Warren," said Major Lampson at a reception at the home of Senator Warren of Wyoming, "will you permit me to present my friend Captain Pershing?"

"I am delighted to meet Captain Pershing," said Miss Frances Warren. "I have heard of his work in Cuba and the Philippines and have desired to congratulate him."

This was the beginning of the romance in the life of General Pershing, a romance that was destined to end in deepest tragedy. Miss Warren was young, beautiful and a belle in Washington society. Her father, senator from Wyoming, was one of the leaders in the national upper house. She had heard the work of Captain Pershing lauded by the senators when President Roosevelt made the captain's record part of an annual message to congress. So, like Desdemona, she "loved him for the dangers he had passed."

They were married on Jan. 26, 1905. Three daughters and a son were born to them, and then came the end in August, 1915. In a fire at the Presidio, San Francisco, Mrs. Pershing and the three little girls were suffocated. The son, Warren, was rescued. General Pershing was then stationed at El Paso. After a few days of bitter grief he returned to his work in the army, more silent than before, with his face deeply graved with lines of sorrow. Only the boy and his army career remained for him.

Again a crisis faces the United States in relation to Mexican affairs. There have been many serious situations in the past three years, but none quite as bad as this. Villa has broken loose, has raided Columbus, N. M., and has spilled American blood shed in defense of the little border town. He has swept through Chihuahua, struck his blow and gone away in the night. All America is afame with the cry for vengeance. "Get him alive or dead!" rings the cry from one ocean to another. Washington turns to Funston, in command of the southern department

"Send your best brigadier. Let him take whatever force you think needed. Get him over the border as soon as you can. We've got to get Villa!"

"Orderly," says Major General Funston, "tell General Pershing I desire to see him at once."

In a few minutes the little red headed man from Kansas and the tall, gray haired, sun browned soldier from the neighboring state of Missouri are in deep conference. The sentry has orders to admit no one. There is work to be done across the border, and Funston, obeying directions from Washington, has hit at once upon the men to do it. It is Brigadier General Pershing, the veteran of fighting in Cuba, in the Philippines, the man who served as military attaché with the Japanese army in Manchuria during the gigantic struggle with Russia, the able soldier, diplomat, lawyer, student of languages and international affairs.

"The president wants you to 'get' Villa," says Funston. "When shall I start after him?" says Pershing.

Who can say that Pershing would not have got Villa if Washington, not desiring to make war on all Mexico, had not called off the expedition? Surely not any army man who knows Pershing. When he started after Villa we just knew that Villa's future was settled. But the great war in Europe was threatening to involve the United States. Carranza was bitterly hostile, and Villa displayed the qualities of a will-o'-the-wisp. No one was more disappointed than Pershing when the orders to return were issued and he, the soldier in Mexico, had to hear them and obey.

HE QUESTIONS A SPY IN MEXICO.

The great war was devastating the world, and America, after more than two years of waiting, was called upon to "make the world safe for democracy." Foreign countries sent their envoys here to discuss with the president and the government the manner in which America could make its weight tell in the shortest time.

"No. It's all chance, you know. The rules of the game are steel-bound. We find you an adventure; it's up to you to make good."

"But, once more suppose a chap gets a little too rough a game, and doesn't turn up for his dividends; what then?"

"In that event," answered Rianne sadly, "the stock reverts to the general fund."

George lay back in his chair and let go his laughter. "You are mighty good company, Mr. Rianne."

"Well, well; we'll say nothing more about it. But a moment gone you spoke as if you were game for an exploit."

"I still am. But if I knew the adventure was prearranged, as you say, and I was up against a wall, there would be the inclination to cable the firm for more instructions."

Rianne himself laughed this time. "That's a good idea. I don't believe the company ever thought of such a contingency. But I repeat, our business is to give you the kick-off. After that you have to fight for your own downs."

"The stock isn't listed?" again laughing.

"Scarcely. One man tells another, as I tell you, and so on."

"You send me the prospectus. I'm rather curious to have a look at it."

"I certainly shall do so," replied Rianne, with gravity unassumed. "Ah! Here come Mrs. Chedsoye and her daughter. If you don't mind, I'll make myself scarce. I do not care to see them just now, after your having told them about the stolen Yhordes."

"I'm sorry," said George, rising eagerly.

"It's all in the game," gallantly.

George saw him gracefully maneuver his way round the crush toward the stairs leading to the bar. Really, he would like to know more about this amiable free-lance. As the old fellows used to say, he little dreamed that destiny, one of those things from Pandora's box, was preparing a deeper and more intimate acquaintance.

"And what has been amusing you, Mr. Jones?" asked Mrs. Chedsoye. "I saw you laughing."

"I was talking with the rug chap. He's a droll fellow. He said that he had met you somewhere, but concluded not to renew the acquaintance, since I told him that his adventure in part was known to you."

"That is foolish. I rather enjoy meeting men of his stamp. Don't you, Fortune?"

"Sometimes," with a dry little smile. "I believe we have met him, mother. There was something familiar about his head. Of course, we saw him only from a distance."

"I do not think there is any real harm in him," said George. "What made me laugh was a singular proposition he set before me. He said he owned stock in a concern called 'The United Romance and Adventure company'; and that for a specified sum of money, one could have any adventure one pleased."

"Did you ever hear of such a thing?" cried the mother merrily. Fortune searched her face keenly. "The United Romance and Adventure Company! He must have been joking. What did you say his name is?"

"Rianne. Joking is my idea exactly," George agreed. "The scheme is to plunge the stockholder into a real life adventure, and then let him pull himself out the best way he can. Sounds good. He added that this rug business was an instance of the success of the concern. There goes the music. Do you dance, Miss Chedsoye?"

"A little." Fortune was preoccupied. She was wondering what lay behind Mr. Rianne's amiable jest.

"Go along, both of you," said Mrs. Chedsoye. "I am too old to dance. I prefer watching people." She sat down and arranged herself comfortably. She was always arranging herself comfortably; it was one of the secrets of her perennial youth. She was very lovely, but George had eyes for the daughter only. Mrs. Chedsoye saw this, but was not in the least chagrined.

"It is so many years since I tripped the light fantastic toe," George confessed, reluctantly and nervously, now that he had bravely committed himself. "It is quite possible that the accent will be primarily upon the trip."

"Perhaps, then," replied the girl, who truthfully was out of tune, "perhaps I had better get my wraps and we'll go outside. The night is glorious."

She couldn't have suggested anything more to his liking. And so, after a little hurrying about, the two young people went outside and began to promenade slowly up and down the mole. Their conversation was desultory. George had dropped back into his shell and the girl was not equal to the task of drawing him out. Once he stumbled over a sleeping beggar, and would have fallen had she not caught him by the arm.

"Thanks. I'm clumsy."

"It's rather difficult to see them in the moonlight; their rags match the pavements."

The Egyptian night, that sapphirine darkness which the flexible imagination peoples with lovely and terrible shades, or floods with mystery and romance and wonder, lay softly upon this strip of verdure aslant the desert's face, the Valley of the Nile. The moon, round, brilliant, strangely near, suffused the scarred old visage of the world with phantom silver; the stones of the parapet glowed dully, the pavement glistened whitely, all things it touched with gentleness, lavishing beauty upon beauty, mellowing ugliness or effacing it. The deep blue Nile, beribboned with the glancing lights from the silent feluccas, curling musically along the sides of the frost-like dahabeahs and steamers, rolled on to the sea; and the blue-white arc-lamps, spanning the Great Nile bridge, took the semblance of a pearl necklace. From time to time a caravan trooped across the bridge into Cairo. The high and low weird notes of the tom-toms, the wheezing protests of the camels, the raucous defiance of the donkeys, the occasional thin music of reeds, were sounds that crossed and recrossed one another, acutely.

"Do you care for poetry, Mr. Jones?"
"I? I used to write it."
"And you aren't afraid to admit it?"
"Well, I shouldn't confess the deed to every one," he answered frankly. "We all write poetry at one time or another; but it's generally not constitutional, and we recover."

"I do not see why any one should be ashamed of writing poetry."
"Ah, but there is poetry and poetry. My kind and Byron's is born of kindred souls; but he was an active genius, whereas, I wasn't even a passive one. In all great poets I find my own rejected thoughts, as Emerson says; and that's enough for my slender needs. Poets are rather uncomfortable chaps to have round. They

The Egyptian night, that sapphirine darkness which the flexible imagination peoples with lovely and terrible shades, or floods with mystery and romance and wonder, lay softly upon this strip of verdure aslant the desert's face, the Valley of the Nile. The moon, round, brilliant, strangely near, suffused the scarred old visage of the world with phantom silver; the stones of the parapet glowed dully, the pavement glistened whitely, all things it touched with gentleness, lavishing beauty upon beauty, mellowing ugliness or effacing it. The deep blue Nile, beribboned with the glancing lights from the silent feluccas, curling musically along the sides of the frost-like dahabeahs and steamers, rolled on to the sea; and the blue-white arc-lamps, spanning the Great Nile bridge, took the semblance of a pearl necklace. From time to time a caravan trooped across the bridge into Cairo. The high and low weird notes of the tom-toms, the wheezing protests of the camels, the raucous defiance of the donkeys, the occasional thin music of reeds, were sounds that crossed and recrossed one another, acutely.

"Do you care for poetry, Mr. Jones?"
"I? I used to write it."
"And you aren't afraid to admit it?"
"Well, I shouldn't confess the deed to every one," he answered frankly. "We all write poetry at one time or another; but it's generally not constitutional, and we recover."

"I do not see why any one should be ashamed of writing poetry."

"Ah, but there is poetry and poetry. My kind and Byron's is born of kindred souls; but he was an active genius, whereas, I wasn't even a passive one. In all great poets I find my own rejected thoughts, as Emerson says; and that's enough for my slender needs. Poets are rather uncomfortable chaps to have round. They

"I was talking with the rug chap. He's a droll fellow. He said that he had met you somewhere, but concluded not to renew the acquaintance, since I told him that his adventure in part was known to you."

"That is foolish. I rather enjoy meeting men of his stamp. Don't you, Fortune?"

"Sometimes," with a dry little smile. "I believe we have met him, mother. There was something familiar about his head. Of course, we saw him only from a distance."

"I do not think there is any real harm in him," said George. "What made me laugh was a singular proposition he set before me. He said he owned stock in a concern called 'The United Romance and Adventure company'; and that for a specified sum of money, one could have any adventure one pleased."

"Did you ever hear of such a thing?" cried the mother merrily. Fortune searched her face keenly. "The United Romance and Adventure Company! He must have been joking. What did you say his name is?"

"Rianne. Joking is my idea exactly," George agreed. "The scheme is to plunge the stockholder into a real life adventure, and then let him pull himself out the best way he can. Sounds good. He added that this rug business was an instance of the success of the concern. There goes the music. Do you dance, Miss Chedsoye?"

"A little." Fortune was preoccupied. She was wondering what lay behind Mr. Rianne's amiable jest.

"Go along, both of you," said Mrs. Chedsoye. "I am too old to dance. I prefer watching people." She sat down and arranged herself comfortably. She was always arranging herself comfortably; it was one of the secrets of her perennial youth. She was very lovely, but George had eyes for the daughter only. Mrs. Chedsoye saw this, but was not in the least chagrined.

"It is so many years since I tripped the light fantastic toe," George confessed, reluctantly and nervously, now that he had bravely committed himself. "It is quite possible that the accent will be primarily upon the trip."

"Perhaps, then," replied the girl, who truthfully was out of tune, "perhaps I had better get my wraps and we'll go outside. The night is glorious."

She couldn't have suggested anything more to his liking. And so, after a little hurrying about, the two young people went outside and began to promenade slowly up and down the mole. Their conversation was desultory. George had dropped back into his shell and the girl was not equal to the task of drawing him out. Once he stumbled over a sleeping beggar, and would have fallen had she not caught him by the arm.

"Thanks. I'm clumsy."

"It's rather difficult to see them in the moonlight; their rags match the pavements."

DOLL MAKER ESCAPES DRAFT

London Manufacturer Pleads He Is Making Inroads Into German Trade.

London.—A man who ran a doll factory was brought before a military tribunal and asked exemption from the army, saying he employed 60 people and was rapidly capturing trade which was formerly controlled by Germany. If he were conscripted, he said, his employees would be without jobs and the Germans would recover the business after the war.

The tribunal postponed his summons three months.

LOCAL BOARD TAKES UP EXEMPTION CLAIMS

List of Those who will Escape Service on First Call will be Announced Soon.

The county exemption board this afternoon took up consideration of the exemption claims filed by men examined last week. Claims on ground of dependency are automatically appealed to the district board, according to information here. The county government representative is required to file appeal affidavits in each case.

New regulations regarding the exemption of men who have filed claims on occupational grounds have been issued and are as follows:

"In response to inquiries from many district boards the secretary of war directs that the following information be furnished district boards:

"The President will not at this time make any determination of what industries are to be considered necessary to the maintenance of the military establishment, the effective operation of the military forces or the maintenance of the military establishment during the emergency for the purpose of preferring those industries as outlined in Sec. 44, regulations. Except for the necessity of seeing to the retention of administrative or mechanical specialists, it is not thought that the present draft will so materially affect the gross labor supply of any industry, considered nationally, as to warrant any general adjustment of labor supply in favor of some industries and at the expense of others. For this reason it is not deemed best to make a statement of preferred industries at this time. Such adjustment as may be necessary locally will be made by the district boards after consideration of the industrial situation in their localities.

"The issue of fact as to whether any industry is engaged in work necessary to the successful operation of the military forces or the maintenance of the military establishment is capable of being determined locally by affidavit proof or inspection by the district board and inquiries by district boards as to whether particular industries are so engaged ought not to be answered by executive departments in Washington.

"In short, the cases in district boards present local industrial problems which can and ought to be solved by those boards on information available to them in their locality."
